

Osun Osogbo Grove

What can we learn?

Landscape architecture can learn from this indigenous model by recognising that space can be safeguarded through cultural agreements, collective responsibility, and ritual knowledge

Effective conservation requires adapting indigenous governance and tacit knowledge into modern policy, offering an authentic African approach to heritage management for planners and policymakers.

Authenticity is not only about material preservation but about process—the continuity of spiritual and cultural practices that keep a site alive.